Although not all potters aspire to be production potters, all potters will benefit from the skills required to make multiples. A potter who can make multiple pots similar in form and size is an efficient thrower and has the technical skills to accomplish any sort of pot. She is limited only by her desire, creativity, and time.

This class is designed for intermediate potters who want to focus on improving technical skills, increasing throwing efficiency, and incorporating unifying features in a series of pots. If you have ever considered making your own dinnerware, this class is for you. Projects include: soup/cereal bowls, salad/dinner plates, and tumblers/mugs. We will be working in series; and, at the conclusion of the class, potters will have one or more place settings.

you had started today.”*
